2007-08 HIGHLIGHTS:

- Six Pacific Leadership Fellows from East Asia, Southeast Asia, Latin America, North America, and Europe, who interacted with IR/PS students, alumni, faculty, the broader university community, and business and regional leaders.
- An interview with Pacific Leadership Fellow Jerome Cohen on the KPBS program "These Days" with Tom Fudge, for a discussion of human rights and the rule of law within China.
- Pacific Development Economics Conference (PACDEV) held for the first time in Southern California, which brought more than 100 economists from all over the nation and the world to the center.
- A public lecture by Joan Lebold Cohen entitled "Contemporary Chinese Art: Context and Interpretation," with members of the community and the UC San Diego Visual Arts Department.
- Collaborations with diverse entities across campus, such as the Center for U.S.-Mexican Studies, Rady School of Management, Earl Warren College, the Visual Arts Department, Scripps Institution of Oceanography, the Korean Studies Department, and Korea-focus undergraduate student groups.
- Community connections between the CPE and organizations such as San Diego State University, San Diego Metropolitan High School, the Southwest Fisheries Association, Sempra Energy, and the San Diego Regional Economic Development Corporation.

MESSAGE FROM THE DIRECTOR

Now having completed its second year, the Center on Pacific Economies at the School of International Relations and Pacific Studies (IR/PS) continues to grow and prosper. The CPE welcomed six Pacific Leadership Fellows during 2007-08, who offered their perspectives on current economic and political developments in Asia and Latin America based on their substantial expertise as entrepreneurs, public servants, and scholars in the region. This year's group addressed the evolution of the rule of law in China, democratization and civil society in Indonesia, the interplay between public policy and innovation in Korea, the negotiation of trade deals between Latin America and the United States, the design of effective regulations in advanced economies, and the role of the internet in government-media relations in Vietnam. Fellows interacted with the community through public lectures, focused workshops, one-on-one meetings, and informal dinners. Following their time in La Jolla, the CPE continues to engage each fellow, which helps establish a stronger presence for UC San Diego in the countries of the Pacific region.

In addition to the fellows program, the CPE continued to support conferences and research involving IR/PS faculty and students, targeting projects that apply rigorous academic analysis to pressing policy problems. CPE grants funded research on rural-to-urban migration in China, infrastructure and economic development in India, and the impact of cellular technology on village economies in poor countries, among other projects.

In the coming year, the CPE will welcome a new group of Pacific Leadership Fellows to campus and sponsor a series of research activities on how small businesses contribute to the economic progress of developing countries.

The CPE and the Pacific Leadership Fellows program were begun in 2006 with a gift from Joan and Irwin Jacobs. Their leadership gift is enabling IR/PS, UC San Diego, and the region to become increasingly recognized as a center for reflection and action by leaders from the Pacific.

GORDON HANSON, DIRECTOR CENTER ON PACIFIC ECONOMIES

OUR MISSION

- TO FOSTER AND DISSEMINATE RESEARCH THAT ADDRESSES ECONOMIC GROWTH AND MARKET CHANGE IN THE PACIFIC.
- TO DEVELOP AND MAINTAIN A NETWORK OF LEADERS THAT WILL SHAPE PUBLIC POLICY OVER THE COMING DECADES.
- TO ESTABLISH SAN DIEGO AS A HUB FOR SCHOLARSHIP AND IDEAS ON INTERNATIONAL AFFAIRS IN THE PACIFIC.

PROGRAM OVERVIEW

INTRODUCTION

The Pacific Leadership Fellows Program brings established and rising leaders to the CPE to engage in dialogue, research, and teaching. While in residence, fellows interact with relevant research institutions, regional business and civic leaders, and each other through an ongoing network. They are drawn from those who shape policy and opinion in their own countries, in government, the private sector, academia, and the nonprofit world. By 2016, we anticipate having close to 100 fellows throughout Asia and the Americas with strong connections to IR/PS and UC San Diego.

During the first two years of the Pacific Leadership Fellows Program, we have had fellows in residence representing China, Nicaragua, Chile, Mexico, Japan, Vietnam, the United Kingdom, Korea, the United States, Indonesia, and Peru.

RESPONSIBILITIES

While in residence, each fellow:

• is assigned a faculty partner for a collaborative project. This may include publishing works or holding a workshop on an issue facing the Pacific. For example, our first Pacific Leadership Fellow, Shuli Hu, was central to our conference "Changing Media, Changing China," and she worked closely with Professor Susan Shirk, director of the University of California system-wide Institute on Global Conflict and Cooperation (IGCC), who led the conference.

- meets with IR/PS and UC San Diego students both informally and in a classroom setting. Mentoring is an important part of this program. Our students benefit enormously from the interaction and the fellow is able to meet with talented and dedicated groups of young professionals.
- speaks at a public program(s). For example, the fellow may present a public lecture, be a guest lecturer at community events such as the IR/PS Dean's Roundtable speakers series, or participate in other appropriate public forums.
- is introduced to other appropriate UC San Diego departments. For example, a fellow who is a leader in the telecommunications industry has the opportunity to meet with leading faculty at the Jacobs School of Engineering and Rady School of Management.
- spends time interacting with the broader San Diego regional community and appropriate business, government, and/or nonprofit leaders. The fellow may also meet with leaders from the rest of Southern California.
- gets to know our San Diego community supporters. The fellow also has the opportunity to enjoy the beauty and culture of the local community and, when appropriate, the broader Southern California region.

ABOUT KIEN PHAM

Kien Pham was in residence from November 13-21, 2007. He is the CEO of VietNamNet Media Group and the founding executive director of the Vietnam Education Foundation. Pham has been an international executive in Fortune 500 companies such as Tenneco and Procter & Gamble, as well as an entrepreneur owner of high-technology, energy, and international consulting firms. In government, he has served at the White House under President Reagan and the Pentagon under President Bush, as well as in the U.S. Senate. He was a White House Fellow in 1985. Pham has also been active in international affairs. In 1986, he was chosen as a Young Leader by the American Council on Germany, and in 1992 a U.S.-Japan Leadership Fellow by the Japan Society. In 1993, he was elected as a term-member of the Council on Foreign Relations and was a participant in the American Assembly. Pham was the founder and chairman of the Vietnam Forum Foundation, and was also a board member of the Vietnam Assistance for the Handicapped. In 1996, Pham was a recipient of the "Never Fear, Never Quit" Award.

Director of Career Services Swanie Schmidt, International Advisory Board member the Honorable Diana Lady Dougan, Pacific Leadership Fellow Kien Pham, and Assistant Director of External Relations Portia Bibb.

Pham grew up in Saigon, Vietnam. In 1977, at the age of 19, he led his family on a high-sea escape and came to the United States. They settled in Colorado, where Pham became a factory worker, learned English, and later attended college on a scholarship. He received a B.S. in marketing and international business from the University of Colorado at Boulder, and won a scholarship to study in England. His graduate degrees, earned concurrently at Stanford University, include an M.A. in international economics, an M.B.A. in international and organizational management, and a special diploma in public policy management. In 1990, Stanford University named him as one of the "Most Outstanding 100 Alumni" in the school's 100-year history. Pham is a recipient of an honorary doctorate of law degree from Pfeiffer University.

Director of Career Services Swanie Schmidt, Matthew Owens (MPIA 2008), and Director of Admissions Dan Chatham meet with Pacific Leadership Fellow Kien Pham during an informal lunch.

DAEJE CHIN

IN RESIDENCE: JANUARY 8-12, 2008

FACULTY HOSTS: JONG-SUNG YOU STEPHAN HAGGARD

COMMUNITY HOST: SAN DIEGO KOREAN COMMUNITY

ABOUT DAEJE CHIN

Daeje Chin was in residence from January 8-12, 2008. Chin is a South Korean businessman and a former politician. He was born in Uiryeong, South Gyeongsang Province. He attended Gyeonggi High School and then studied electronic engineering at Seoul National University (B.S. and M.S.). After obtaining a master's degree in electronic engineering from the University of Massachusetts and a Ph.D. from Stanford University, he joined IBM's Thomas J. Watson Research Center in 1983. He returned to Korea in 1985 to work for Samsung Electronics, which was just beginning to venture into semiconductors. In 1987, he was named general manager of Samsung's DRAM (dynamic random access memory) chips division. Under his helm, Samsung emerged from being a bit player in memory chips to become one of the world's top semiconductor companies, not far behind global leader Intel. Chin served as president of Samsung's Digital Media Business from 2000-03.

Chin became minister of information and communication in February 2003. He resigned from the government in early 2006, and ran for the governorship of Gyeonggi Province on the ruling Uri Party ticket. However, he lost to Moon-Soo Kim, the candidate of the Grand National Party, as part of the widespread electoral revolt against the incumbent ruling party. He was, however, the only candidate to collect more than 30% of the votes by a ruling Uri Party candidate in all of the contests in the whole nation, with the exception of Governor Kim Wan-ju of Jeollabukdo. In October 2006, Chin started a venture capital/private equity fund, Skylake Incuvest & Co, focusing on information and communication technology sector investment. Chin has been the recipient of numerous awards, including the Samsung Technology Grand Prize (in 1987 and 1989), the Korean Award of Science and Technology (in 1997), and the King Sejong Grand Award (a patent technology award, in 1994). He is the author of Computer Aided VLSI Design and Manage Your Passion.

Cohen lived in Beijing during 1979–81, where he took part in various trade and investment contract negotiations as consultant to the Coudert Brothers law firm, and taught a course on international business law in the Chinese language for Beijing officials. Cohen formerly served as an adviser to the government of Sichuan Province, China; as chairman of the American Arbitration Association's China Conciliation Committee and to the New York/Beijing Friendship (Sister City) Committee; as trustee to both the China Institute in America and the Asia Society; and as a member of the board of editors of both the China Quarterly and the American Journal of International Law. He continues to serve on the advisory board of Human Rights Watch – Asia and is a trustee of the Carnegie Endowment for International Peace.

Cohen is a Phi Beta Kappa graduate of Yale College (1951). He graduated in 1955 from Yale Law School, where he was editor-in-chief of the Yale Law Journal. He was law secretary to both U.S. Supreme Court Chief Justice Earl Warren (1955) and to Justice Felix Frankfurter (1956). He subsequently practiced law, served as an assistant U.S. attorney for the District of Columbia, and was a consultant to the Senate Committee on Foreign Relations before beginning an academic career at the University of California School of Law at Berkeley in 1959. He moved to Harvard Law School in 1964 and remained a full-time faculty member there until he joined the international law firm of Paul, Weiss, Rifkind, Wharton & Garrison in 1981. He retired from commercial law practice in 2000 but continues to serve as an arbitrator and mediator in international business disputes relating to Asia, and as an adviser to families of persons detained in China, including Taiwan. He is a member of the bar in New York, Connecticut, and the District of Columbia.

PABLO DE LA FLOR

IN RESIDENCE: MAY 10-16, 2008

FACULTY HOST: RICHARD FEINBERG

COMMUNITY HOST: JAMES JAMESON

ABOUT PABLO DE LA FLOR

Pablo De La Flor was in residence from May 10-16, 2008. De La Flor is the former Peruvian vice minister of international trade. While he held that office, he helped negotiate the Free Trade Agreement (FTA) with the US, leading 130 expert officials, organized in 23 thematic groups. The agreement includes services, intellectual property, and investments. De La Flor also negotiated a Free Trade Agreement with Thailand (the first between Perú and an East Asian country), completed an accord with MERCOSUR, and launched FTA negotiations with Singapore. Presently, he is the vice president of corporate affairs for the Antamina Mining Company. He oversees the Social Investment Program ($64 million) which supports sustainable development in Ancash, the largest private CSR in Perú and one of the most significant ones on the continent. The Social Investment Program's activities encompass nutrition and health, education, sustainable development and institutional capacity building.

Pacific Leadership Fellow Pablo De La Flor with Professor Richard Feinberg and Matt Maher, co-director of the Latin America Student Organization (LASO), after the panel discussion.

De La Flor has a Ph.D. from the University of Chicago in political economy and quantitative methods, and received his M.P.A. from the Kennedy School of Government at Harvard, where he graduated at the top of his class. He also holds an M.A. in international trade and development from Yale University.

De La Flor has received numerous awards, including awards from the Lima Chamber of Commerce and the Agricultural Exporters Association for distinguished services, the JFK School Excellence Award, a MacArthur Training Grant, a Heinz Fellowship, a Trustee Fellowship from the University of Chicago, a Ford Foundation Award, a Yale University Fellowship, and Indiana University's Wendell W. Wilkie Award. He was selected to the Council of Foreign Relations (NY) conference for new leaders of Latin America and elected president of the Inter-American Development Bank's Vice-Ministerial Dialogue Forum on Foreign Trade.

The panel discussion brought together students and faculty from UC San Diego as well as the University of San Diego.

POSTGRADUATE SCHOLAR

SARAH BAIRD

Baird is a development economist whose primary research interests lie at the intersection of microeconomics, health policy, program evaluation, and economic development. She finished her Ph.D. in the Department of Agricultural and Resource Economics at UC Berkeley in 2007. Baird has conducted field work in Vietnam and Kenya and is currently working on implementing a cash transfer experiment in Malawi with Professor Craig McIntosh and Visiting Scholar Berk Özler. The experiment is a randomized intervention that provides incentives to girls who have recently dropped out of school encouraging them to return, as well as incentives to stay in school to current schoolgirls. Several studies have shown a link between increased school attendance and a decreased likelihood of HIV infection. This potential relationship opens up an opportunity to produce an outcome that is strongly desirable in itself (schooling) that may also prove to be effective in fighting HIV/AIDS. Baird is also working on analyzing the relationship between annual changes in per capita GDP and infant mortality. Thus far the research shows that there is a strong, negative association between changes in per capita GDP and changes in infant mortality across all countries.

NEIL JOECK SENIOR FELLOW, CENTER FOR GLOBAL SECURITY RESEARCH Neil Joeck discussed political change in Pakistan and policy options for understanding what missteps have been taken in the past and how they may be avoided in the future. He offered his perspective on what the Pakistan military has learned and has not learned since the 1999 coup, political learning since the last democratic era, the effects of terrorism on Pakistan's future and how it will influence U.S.—Pakistan relations, and the implications of political transition in Washington and Islamabad.

Professor Craig McIntosh, Visiting Scholar Berk Özler, and CPE Postgraduate Scholar Sarah Baird discussed their ongoing project "Marriage Transitions and HIV/AIDS in Malawi," a randomized intervention that provides an incentive to return to school for young girls who have recently dropped out, as well as incentives to current schoolgirls to stay in school. Among young females, where the incidence and prevalence of HIV is sharply higher than their male counterparts, several recent observational studies have shown a link between increased school attendance and a decreased likelihood of HIV infection in Africa. This study will evaluate the causal effect of income on HIV risk directly, as well as through its effect on schooling, using a carefully designed Conditional/Unconditional Cash Transfer (CCT) program.

ALICE LYMAN MILLER, STANFORD

China's parliament met in March to appoint new government leadership and unveil political and policy initiatives for the next five years. During this panel discussion, leading China watchers in a town-hall style meeting assessed what the 17th Party Congress would mean for the state of politics and the dynamics of leadership succession over the next five years; the direction, pace, and prospects for China's economic development and reforms; the implications for Chinese foreign policy and its place in the world; the trends in national security and the place of the military in politics.

CHINESE ART: CONTEXT AND INTERPRETATION

JOAN LEBOLD COHEN PHOTOGRAPHER, ART HISTORIAN

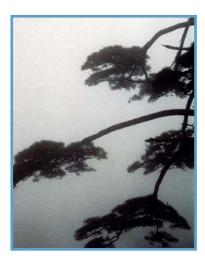

Joan Lebold Cohen is an art historian and photographer who specializes in Chinese art and film. A sometime resident in China, Hong Kong, and Japan, she has been a regular visitor to Asia since 1961. Her travels to China commenced in China soon after Nixon's visit, and she lived there during the dramatic post-Cultural Revolution period of 1979-81. Her book The New Chinese Painting, 1949-1986, introduced the recent generations of Chinese artists to the West. She has served as curator for four exhibitions of new Chinese art as well as a photographic exhibition entitled 'New York, the City and Its People' shown in Beijing. Her other books are Yunnan School, A Renaissance in Chinese Painting; Angkor, Monuments of the God-Kings; and Buddha.

UNPACKING COMMUNITY DRIVEN DEVELOPMENT: DECENTRALIZATION, TARGETING AND ELITE CAPTURE IN TANZANIA

PROFESSOR CRAIG MCINTOSH VISITING SCHOLAR BERK ÖZLER POSTGRADUATE SCHOLAR SARAH BAIRD

The recent presentation of their research by Professor Craig McIntosh, Visiting Scholar Berk Özler and Postgraduate Scholar Sarah Baird connected classroom theory and real world application. Such opportunities truly enhance the academic experience at IR/PS.

Deana Gullo, MPIA 2009 Latin America International Development and Nonprofit Management Professor Craig McIntosh, Visiting Scholar Berk Özler, and CPE Postgraduate Scholar Sarah Baird discussed their current project in Tanzania that focuses on the impact of providing income generating projects (for example, animal husbandry, tailoring, milling, and vegetable growing) to vulnerable groups such as the elderly, people with disabilities, widows, orphans, and those living with HIV/AIDS. Using a randomized evaluation design, where the villages in the control groups receive their projects with a delay of twelve months, their study collects panel information on the 3000 households in the treatment and control villages for three years. The study will track individual outcomes, such as anthropometrics, health, and education, to examine whether the targeted vulnerable individuals (orphans, elderly, those living with HIV) benefit from the interventions, or, alternatively, if benefits accrue to other members of the community.

FROM DENG TO DEMSETZ: SPECULATIONS ON THE IMPLICATIONS OF CHINESE GROWTH FOR PROPERTY THEORY

FRANK K. UPHAM
THE WILF FAMILY PROFESSOR OF PROPERTY LAW, NEW YORK
UNIVERSITY SCHOOL OF LAW

Frank Upham discussed his recent paper regarding theories of the role of law, specifically property rights, in economic growth from the perspective of the Chinese experience. Upham teaches first-year property law and development, and a variety of courses and seminars on comparative law and society with an emphasis on East Asia and the developing world. He was the faculty director of the Global Law School Program from 1997-2002, and is the founder and co-faculty director of the Global Public Service Law Project, which brings activist lawyers primarily from the developing world for an LLM in public service law.

CONFERENCES

This conference assembled faculty and doctoral students from Mexico and the United States to present and discuss empirical research on migration and social policy in Mexico. The Mexican Family Life Survey, the Mexican Migration Project, the Mexican Health and Aging Study, and the Mexico National Rural Household Survey are important examples of rich data sources on demographic, economic, and social outcomes in Mexico. Drawing on these sources of data, papers presented at this conference discussed selectivity of migration, migration and labor markets, income and social inequality, rural and urban poverty, remittances and family well-being, and return migration.

More than 100 graduate students and faculty from all over the world attended the 2008 Pacific Conference for Development Economics (PACDEV), held this year in Southern California for the first time. The keynote discussion entitled "International Migration and Remittances: Are they a Vehicle for or an Obstacle to Economic Development in LDCs?" featured commentary by Gordon Hanson, director of the Center on Pacific Economies; Giovanni Peri and Ed Taylor of UC Davis; and René Zenteno from the Center for U.S.-Mexican Studies. Sessions covered topics such as Latin America's development challenges, migration, credit market innovations, inequality and poverty, gender and human equality, and community-based organizations.

Latin America and the Middle East-North Africa (MENA) region share similar levels of education, health, and income; abundant natural resources, dependence on remittances, high unemployment, and "macho traditional" cultures. They also share states that lack the competence and autonomy to carry out developmental projects and a failure to close their income gaps with their northern neighbors. Amidst these commonalities are at least two striking differences: Latin America has managed to move from authoritarian to democratic polities, whereas MENA has kept citizens relatively free from the fear of crime. What can be learned from the similarities and differences between the two regions was discussed in four panels: economic growth success stories, provision of state services, civil society, and street crime.

OVERVIEW

Pacific region and developing economies. Seed money has been provided to IR/PS researchers who have leveraged this support to obtain extramural funds. The center has sponsored projects on the role of public infrastructure in economic development in India, the effect of cellular technology on village economies in Africa, and the factors shaping rural to urban migration in China. The results of these projects are presented to the community through public talks and disseminated through the CPE web site.

CHRIS WOODRUFF PROFESSOR OF ECONOMICS PROJECT LOCATION: SRI LANKA

Project Description: This project uses randomly allocated grants to household enterprises in Sri Lanka to generate shocks to capital stocks. Surprisingly, the researchers have found that returns are higher in enterprises owned by males, while in enterprises owned by females, the returns are not different from zero. This runs counter to the focus of microfinance on women. Ongoing research is examining this more closely. Using the data from the original experiment, they find that part of the effect is due to females working in different industries from males. Returns are particularly low in industries like lace-making, which are dominated by women, and high in industries like repair services, which are dominated by men. Two ongoing projects in Sri Lanka and Ghana will push this line of research further.

Project Description: The researchers' main aim is to improve understanding of the effects of schooling and income on sexual behavior and HIV infection among school-aged women in Malawi. They seek to understand the causal links between income, schooling status, certain sexual behaviors, and ultimately HIV risk – all critical for informing effective policy interventions. Malawi is particularly important for this study as it has an estimated HIV prevalence rate among prime age adults of 14 percent, ranking it eighth in the world in the severity of its HIV/AIDS epidemic. IR/PS students will help with preparing and cleaning the data now coming out of the field. A Ph.D. student will be hired to compile detailed maps which include the poverty maps for Malawi and a complete roster of every household and school in the study, all of which have been geo-referenced. One IR/PS student will spend six months in Malawi to conduct a school-level survey, and to establish the rubric for monitoring and verifying school attendance.

Project Description: Does political competition spur economic competition? This project studies the effect of democratization on economic concentration using a large cross-national dataset of 1.3 million firms in 155 countries, and two detailed case studies in Chile and Mexico using microeconomic data. CPE funding will support the collection of firm-level data from Chile and Mexico, which will be used to identify how changes in political competition within countries affect market structure. Evidence of changes in industry concentration following periods of democratic reform will strongly support the inference that political competition contributes to economic competition.

Innovative research requires scholars to take risks. The CPE grants program facilitates this by helping IR/PS faculty as well as graduate students get new research projects off the ground, enabling them to attract grants from foundations and other funding sources.
